To develop my photography I started by practicing with different angles and with different backdrops to get the look I wanted to go with. I ended up going with a plain black backdrop as I think it made my models stand out more as they are all white. I also liked the black backdrop as it did not reflect much light back up into the models which makes it easier to see the depth of the models.

For my presentation drawing I wasn't sure what angle I was going to draw. I experimented with different angles and sides to see what would be the best fit for my model. I ended up going with a front/side view of my model as it really acsentuated the shadows going from the top pointy piece. It also shows the cutout very well from this angle.
